The lessons learned from the Boston Marathon bombings will be the topic of a day-long summit Monday led by former Boston Mayor Thomas Menino.

In addition to Menino, Gov. Deval Patrick and former Boston Police Commissioner Ed Davis are also scheduled to speak. METRO

As Marathon anniversary nears, survivors share news

Survivors' spirit. Jeff Bauman and the family of Martin Richard give updates on their lives.

The family of Boston Marathon bombing victim Martin Richard recently spoke about the upcoming "emotional" anniversary and the strength of their daughter, who lost a leg in the blasts.

The Richard family recently posted an online update with a month to go before the start of this year's race.

On the blog, the family shared a photo of Jane, the younger sister of Martin Richard, the 8-year-old killed during last year's marathon. Jane lost her left leg below the knee, but has been working hard on a "long and difficult road to recovery."

The family said the foundation Wiggle Your Toes recently donated a Cheetah running leg, which is designed for athletics as well as everyday use. Her team at United Prosthetics also donated their time and labor to help Jane get back to living a normal life.

"Never self-conscious and always smiling, Jane has worn it to school several times which speaks to the can-do spirit she has displayed over the last 11 months," the family said.

They also spoke about their work for the foundation set up to honor their son's memory and how it's helping them as the anniversary approaches.

"There is much activity in our lives these days, which goes a long way toward distracting us from what is certain to be an emotional one-year anniversary on April 15," the family said. "A day doesn't pass when we don't cry over the loss of Martin, but we also laugh when we think about him, which feels like the right way to remember a little boy with a zest for life and a caring heart."

Birth announcement

Bauman, fiancee are expecting

Jeff Bauman, who was thrust into the spotlight by an infamous picture of him being rushed away from the Marathon blast site with his legs severely injured, announced on Sunday that he and his fiancee are expecting a child.

"We are so happy to share with you exciting news that has happened over the last few months … Jeff and Erin became engaged and are expecting their first child in the summer!!! Congratulations Jeff and Erin," a post on Bauman's official Facebook page said.

Bauman was standing near the finish line waiting for his girlfriend to complete the race when the bombs went off. He lost both legs in the attack.

Anime Boston attracts tens of thousands

Curious about the costumed characters crowding the streets of Boston over the weekend?

The annual Anime Boston convention, which was held Friday, Saturday and Sunday at the Hynes Convention Center, attracted about 20,000 attendees.

Many of them visited the city in creative, if not curious, costumes.

Overseen by the New England Anime Society, the event is billed as the largest fan-run anime convention in the Northeast. It focuses on Japanese animation and comics, as well as Japanese pop culture, history and tradition.

The event started with 4,000 people in 2003, and in 2012 grew to 22,000 attendees, according to organizers.

Additionally, 350 volunteers work to put on the event. MICHAEL NAUGHTON

Boston's gun buyback program to launch today

Anti-violence. Authorities are working to get active guns off the streets.

City and police officials are expected to formally announce today the details of Boston's first gun buyback program in years.

Mayor Marty Walsh will be making an announcement about the city's anti-violence efforts this afternoon at a park in Dorchester, according to the mayor's office.

Boston police said that the initiative will be a city-wide effort. Those who wish to turn in guns must unload the weapons, put them in a clear plastic bag and, if transporting them in a car, must put them in the trunk, police said.

The effort is called "Piece for Peace" and will exchange $200 gift cards for guns. It will last until the $100,000 in funds runs out, according to the Globe. Rifles and shotguns will also be accepted, but owners will not receive compensation for them.

Walsh discussed the possibility of starting a city gun buyback program in February, shortly after the apparently accidental shooting of a 9-year-old Mattapan boy by his older brother.

French satellite image also shows possible plane debris

Near Australia. Radar echoes from satellite put the debris 1,430 miles from Perth.

New satellite images show "floating debris" in the southern Indian Ocean, French officials said Sunday, which together with Chinese and Australian images of suspicious objects in the same wide area have focused the search for a missing Malaysian jetliner in remote waters off Australia.

The new lead came as the international search for Malaysia Airlines Flight MH370 entered its third week, with still no confirmed trace of the Boeing 777 that vanished with 239 people on board.

"This morning, Malaysia received new satellite images from the French authorities showing potential objects in the vicinity of the southern corridor," the Malaysian Transport Ministry said in a statement. "Malaysia immediately relayed these images to the Australian rescue coordination center."

Australian Prime Minister Tony Abbott had said there was "increasing hope" of a breakthrough in the hunt for the plane on the strength of Chinese and Australian images of possible large debris.

The French Foreign Ministry said radar echoes from a satellite put the new debris finding about 1,430 miles from Perth, without giving a direction or a date.

"These elements have immediately been passed on to the Malaysian authorities," the French ministry said in a statement. "France had decided to mobilize complementary satellite means to continue the search in the identified zone."

Flight MH370 vanished from civilian radar screens early on March 8, less than an hour after taking off from Kuala Lumpur on a scheduled flight to Beijing.

An international search force resumed its efforts Sunday, zeroing in on two areas where earlier sightings were made to find the object identified by China, as well as other small debris, including a wooden pallet spotted by a search plane Saturday. REUTERS

The debris in the Australian image was about 2,500 kilometers southwest of Perth. The Chinese sighting, captured two days later, was 120 kilometers "south by west" of that.

Pilot shared his flight simulator passion online

Some trace of the passion that Zaharie Ahmad Shah had for flying can be found in the trail of email exchanges and online message board posts that detail the Malaysia Airlines pilot's construction of a state-of-the-art flight simulator at his home.

Now the stack of computer monitors, graphics cards and software he painstakingly sourced and improved is being pored over by investigators trying to make sense of the disappearance more than two weeks ago of the passenger jet he was piloting. There is no evidence that Zaharie was responsible for the loss of Flight MH370.

In fact, many in the online community of specialist vendors and flying enthusiasts whom Zaharie turned to for components and advice say it is common for pilots to enjoy flying so much that they have simulators at home.

"Many pilots contact me interested in making 'home' simulators. Zaharie, along with some others pilots, actually used my motion controllers to upgrade the realism of their simulators by building motion platforms," Thanos Kontogiannis, a California-based aviation enthusiast who helped Zaharie build the simulator, posted on his blog on Monday. NATO commander warns of Russian threat to Moldova

Drawing parallels. Sen. John McCain compared Putin's actions to Adolf Hitler's in 1930s Germany.

NATO's top military commander said on Sunday that Russia had built up a "very sizeable" force on its border with Ukraine and Moscow may have a region in another ex-Soviet republic, Moldova, in its sights after annexing Crimea.

Russia was acting more like an adversary than a partner, NATO's Supreme Allied Commander Europe, U.S. Air Force General Philip Breedlove said, and the 28-nation alliance should rethink the positioning and readiness of its forces in eastern Europe.

On Saturday, Russian troops, using armored vehicles, automatic weapons and stun grenades, seized some of the last military facilities under Ukrainian control in Crimea, the Black Sea peninsula that Russian President Vladimir Putin formally annexed the day before.

Breedlove was one of several Western officials and politicians to warn on Sunday that Russia may not stop there in a crisis that has taken East-West relations lurching back toward the Cold War.

"The [Russian] force that is at the Ukrainian border now to the east is very, very sizeable and very, very ready," the NATO commander said.

Sen. John McCain, a Republican foreign policy specialist, told Britain's BBC that Putin's actions in Ukraine were akin to those of Adolf Hitler in 1930s Germany. REUTERS

Ukraine's top diplomat says risk of war with Russia grows

Ukraine's foreign minister said the chances of going to war are increasing as thousands of Russian troops gather on his country's border.

"The Ukraine government is trying to use all the peaceful and diplomatic means to stop Russians, but the people are also ready to defend their homeland." BLOOMBERG

Cher dons bikini, headdress on tour

Despite having a huge "Farewell" tour in 2005, Cher is back at it — and now in a bikini — for her "Dressed To Kill" concert series. The 67-year-old (!) kicked off the tour on Saturday in Phoenix and looked good, despite admitting to a ton of technical/wig difficulties.

In a series of posts on Twitter, she wrote, "B4 showtime I was being fitted 4 costumes! Shoe man is punk, No boots, shoes! Learned new choreog yesterday. New wigs 2Nite! Killed ourselves ... Everything was so last min. Some wigs weren't perfect, but some just needed change. Never had costumes on till unite."

It seems like the costume drama is continuing from last week when Cher announced that Bob Mackie, her designer of 42 years, was bowing out from outfitting the singer for this tour.

"The man who made all my costumes since 1972 decided he couldn't do my last tour. No matter how disappointed any of u are, you don't know my grief ... Felt I had to tell you. I'm crying," she wrote. Mackie responded, saying: "Nobody wanted to design this last tour more than I did! I am sick about it."

However, all of the crying seems to have done Cher good — who can wear an outfit like that at 67 without their family considering shipping them off to assisted living?

The Kimye Vogue cover: The backlash

Are you, like I am, curious about the amount of attention being paid to Kim Kardashian and Kanye West on the cover of Vogue? Let me enlighten you.

Here's the backstory: Vogue's editor Anna Wintour allegedly had never wanted Kim Kardashian on the cover of the storied fashion bible. Why? Well, despite Kardashian's successes in the fashion industry, girlfriend basically rose to fame via a sex tape and a reality TV show on E! And homie (in this case, Anna Wintour) don't play that; homie only plays upmarket.

However, it looks like Wintour is singing a different tune since Kardashian hooked up with Kanye West. Reports flew around the Internet that West was on a one-man battle to get his fiancee on the cover. And he did: On Friday, the cover for Vogue's April issue landed with the couple in full wedding regalia with the headline "Their Fashionable Life and Surreal Times #WORLDSMOST TALKEDABOUTCOUPLE." ("Forget my shock about putting Kim Kardashian on the cover — I'm more disappointed Vogue used a hashtag on their cover," quipped a Metro editor.)

It's been big news all weekend, with Sarah Michelle Gellar tweeting: "Well.....I guess I'm canceling my Vogue subscription. Who is with me???" That got Kardashian's best pal, Jonathan Cheban, tweeting back: "Do u matter?"

For the cover girl in question, Kardashian was so excited she misspelled "breathe" when she tweeted out: "This is such a dream come true!!! Thank you @VogueMagazine for this cover! O M GGGGGG!!! I can't even breath!"

JAMES FRANCO AND SETH ROGEN
TWITTER

Quoted

"As for the cover, my opinion is that it is both charming and touching — and it was, I should add, entirely our idea to do it. You may have read that Kanye begged me to put his fiancee on Vogue's cover. He did nothing of the sort. The gossip might make better reading, but the simple fact of the matter is that it isn't true." Maggie Q on fearless new role in 'Divergent'

Interview. It turns out she's as brave in real life as she is on screen.

EMILY LAURENCE
@EmLaurence
emily.laurence@metro.us

Leaping on to moving trains and jumping off buildings isn't something most people would rush to do, but then again, Maggie Q isn't most people. "I dive with sharks. ... I think it's really fun to explore that reckless side of yourself and have that glorified by everyone around you. Who doesn't want to experience that on some level?" she tells us.

It's no wonder she was right at home playing Tori in the new dystopian movie "Divergent." Based on the best-selling book by Veronica Roth and the first in a trilogy, "Divergent" is about a society divided into five factions, each heralding a specific virtue: knowledge, peace, honesty, selflessness and bravery. Maggie Q's character Tori is, of course, one of the brave, a faction that participates in the aforementioned leaping on to moving trains and jumping off buildings.

Tori is the first to realize Tris

Maggie Q / SUMMIT

(played by Shailene Woodley) is "divergent," someone who won't fit in anywhere. "We had an instant chemistry the first time we read together, which is why I got the role," Maggie Q says of Woodley. "I love her. We feel like we were separated at birth. I look so forward to watching her grow in this business. She's a true talent, and seeing her flourish is going to be really great."

Maggie Q doesn't think it will be just teens who will relate to the movie. "It has so many real-life lessons," she says. "The overarching theme is how the choices we make affect the rest of our lives. In the movie, it's an overt choice when you're 16 — but the truth is, our choices every day are always going to set us on a path and they affect those around us who we love as well."

Of course, every big blockbuster needs a heartthrob and "Divergent" found it in actor Theo James, who plays a fellow member of the bravest tribe, alongside Maggie Q. "When I saw him on screen in the movie, my stomach was just doing flip-flops because I was so excited. He's about to be the biggest heartthrob in the world, and I'm just so proud of Theo," she says.

Long haul

Not diverging from this path

Maggie Q is signed on for all three movies, and committing was yet another thing she did without fear.

"It's every actor's dream," she says of being tied to a project for so long. "It's the best problem to have, ever."

Instead, she was more concerned with her character.

"I [asked myself]: 'Do I like this character? Do I think I can bring something to her that no one else can? Does she have a journey in this series?' I felt that all those things were positive."

It also serves as a reminder that this movie is only the beginning.

The question

I recently had a drink with an old girlfriend from high school who was in town for the weekend. The relationship is platonic. But I didn't tell my wife, and when she found out through a friend of mine, she completely flipped out. Was I wrong not to tell her, even if I knew it would make her upset?

A FRIENDLY MEET-UP: TO SPILL OR NOT TO SPILL?

Consider what your intentions were. / PURESTOCK

Lies of omission can be the most insidious, depending on their size. Sure, sometimes it may be a kindness not to trouble our loved ones with minor, seemingly innocuous matters that would unnecessarily upset them. But innocuous is relative. In this case, your lapse in disclosure seems to suggest a deeper issue of trust between you and your wife and, perhaps, between you and yourself.

Let's say you didn't tell your wife because you assumed she wouldn't understand and would assume the worst. What does this say about your assessment of her faith in you? Reflect on whether you've ever given her any reason for her not to trust you. If you haven't always been transparent and faithful, there may be a good reason why she is especially sensitive and reluctant to believe that your rendezvous is innocent. If that were true, and meeting with your old flame would open old wounds, you might want to think twice next time about keeping secrets.

Now, let's address your faith in your wife. Suppose you've never given her any reason not to trust you. Do you trust her to be a reasonable person who can anchor herself in the strength of your relationship and quell any irrational fears or flashes of jealousy? If not, you might have considered inviting her along, or perhaps even calling her from the bar to reassure her, slipping in an "I love you" so both women understand where they stand.

Finally, do you trust yourself? When setting out for this drink, was a part of you hoping to rekindle a spark, or perhaps seize an opportunity for something else? If so, consider exploring your feelings about your marriage that are leading you to stray. Is the possibility for momentary satisfaction really worth putting your marriage in jeopardy?

Trust is the foundation of marriage. Without it, there can be no relationship. Once you wife has cooled down, I would suggest that you begin a dialogue about trust in your marriage. If that feels scary, a couple's therapist could help.

What every student should know

Education. Get through college with a few good tips.

Thornburgh didn't actually write her book on a typewriter. / PROVIDED

There's so much to figure out when you're in college. Blair Thornburgh, author of "Stuff Every College Student Should Know," out March 25, talks about her best tips for surviving college without spending all your money on textbooks, how to pull an all-nighter and more.

Take notes

"Pay attention to anything that's written on the board. The teacher is not going to put something on the board that doesn't matter. It's also important to write down any questions that might come up in a discussion. It could be something you will think about when you're reading. Write down all dates and formulas. These things are easy to forget, so put them on paper so you have a record of it."

Getting along

"So much of college is social, and a lot of people need to get away from that sometimes. And if you don't feel like you can go to your room, it's going to be very stressful. It's a good idea not to assume that you're going to be your roommates' best friend. A lot of people think that, because you really want to make friends. Even if you live with someone who was your friend before, you might not get along. It's really important to talk, so you don't build up a weird resentment; then you're more likely to explode. Plan out what you want to say before you bring up an issue — that will make it easier. If it's really bad, you should get help from your residential staff, because that's why these people are here."

In an interview

"The most important tip is to be courteous and on time [when you're interviewing.] Recognize [that] a person's chief job is not normally interviewing people; they have other things to do. So be prepared and make their job easier. Don't do anything that's going to make you uneasy. Dress properly and don't be rude. I wouldn't come in with a cup of coffee or with my earbuds in. Show that you're focused on doing this interview. It's always good to have a couple of questions to ask the interviewer to show that you know what they do and you want to know more about it."

Myth-busting

The almighty all-nighter

"It's tempting to think that you can drink six Red Bulls and then write your paper, but that will probably just give you a heart attack. Keep a monitor on your caffeine and drink water instead. It helps you stay awake better, because you're hydrated — plus, when you have to go to the bathroom all the time, you will not fall asleep. I also find it helpful to break the time down. It can be terrifying to think about writing 12 pages in six hours. You should just think about working 45 minutes straight and then write a page and a half in that time. If you break it down into smaller chunks you'll feel like it's more manageable."

Piggy bank

Money saver

"Don't buy the books new from the campus bookstore — they're going to rip you off. Books can be pretty easy to find online if you have the ISBN. Make sure you look around also on foreign sites. Then you can sell the books when you're done with them. If it's a big textbook for a huge class and you have a study group, split the book or make an arrangement with someone taking the class next semester."

Dating inside the workplace? Over half of you are doing it

Sorry, HR. In a new survey, 56 percent of professionals claim to have participated in some sort of relationship in the office.

Involved in an office romance? You're in the majority. / COLOURBOX

While it may seem apparent that workplace romances are shedding their stigma, a new study from Vault.com shows that the balance is actually tipping so far in the opposite direction that dating is now the norm: Fifty-six percent of the business professionals surveyed said they have participated in a relationship with a co-worker.

"I think generally there's been a breaking down of barriers between personal and work lives that goes back at least a couple of decades. It started with the advent of cellphones and email and has continued gathering speed ever since," says Philip Stott, editor at Vault.com.

"That same technology also facilitates relationships between people in ways that weren't possible when you had to time your trips to the water cooler — and risk being away from your desk — if you wanted to flirt with a colleague," Stott explains. "Add in the fact that the amount of time the average employee is spending at work has been steadily creeping up, and you start to wonder how relationships ever get started anywhere else."

For the people behind the survey, the most surprising fact was how differently men and women approached relationships.

"What did stand out this year were the different experiences being reported by men and women. Women are much more likely to report that a relationship with a colleague turned into something serious, for example, while men are more likely to have had casual flings," says Stott.

LASSE EMIL KRISTIANSEN
@metroBOS
letters@metro.us

Men vs. women

The survey found that women are more likely to date a supervisor, while men are more likely to date a subordinate. Even though the data doesn't look any closer at the reasons why, Stott offers an explanation.

- "At present, only 46 of Fortune's top 1,000 companies are led by a woman — a stat that suggests that the pool of talent right below CEO is also heavily male-dominated. With that lack of balance, it's no surprise that the majority of relationships between colleagues at different levels in the company would involve a higher-placed male colleague."

Pipeline pros are good, but record's cons are better

Re: 'Be more like Truman, Obama' (Metro, March 21-23) George Christian has a "good" argument for going ahead with the Keystone pipeline. Its environmental impact report provides an excellent counter-argument. It's worth reading and noting.

DANIEL CANTOR, VIA EMAIL

Reagan raised GDP spending, then razed the USSR

Re: 'Reagan did help world redecorate without the Iron Curtain' (Metro, March 18) Timothy Laren incorrectly says that the U.S. did not get help from France during The Revolutionary War.

Without France's monetary support, as well as many of France's generals and other military officers, we would have lost in a year or two.

Also, my political science professor in 1977 told the class that the USSR was spending 22 percent of its GDP, while the U.S. was only spending 6 percent of its GDP.

He correctly predicted that we would win the Cold War because of economics. Reagan increased our GDP spending to over 9 percent, which forced the USSR to increase to near 35 percent of GDP.

This action weakened the USSR logistically (feeding their troops) which allowed the Soviet states to protest against a weakened USSR.

The USSR was going broke. Ask any general and he will tell you that "an army marches on its stomach."

This is why Reagan is credited with the USSR downfall.

Streaking Bruins seeking win No. 13 against Canadiens

NHL. The B's can net their 13th straight victory Monday by nabbing Habs.

Rask is 32-14-4 this season with a 2.07 goals against average. / GETTY IMAGES

Those who have called Bruins' recent win streak somewhat fraudulent should now check themselves. After piling up 10 straight wins against mostly lowly opponents, the B's legitimized their March dominance with two first-class road wins over the weekend by beating the Avalanche, 2-0, and the Coyotes, 4-2. With those victories, the Bruins extended their streak to 12 games and have a chance to kick it up another notch Monday against rival Canadiens (7:30 p.m., NBCSN).

Prior to their victories Friday and Saturday, the B's signature win during the streak was beating the Habs in Montreal, 4-1, on March 12. That win snapped the Bruins' other notable streak in their five-game losing skid to the Canadiens. B's goaltender Tuukka Rask, who allowed just one goal on 36 shots against the Canadiens that night, summed up the Bruins' "never satisfied" mindset nicely that evening.

"I don't care," Rask said about ending the Canadiens' streak. "I felt good against them but I think I still have that losing record against them, so I've got to win some more games."

By the numbers

The NHL record for a win streak was set in the 1992-93 season by Mario Lemieux's Pittsburgh Penguins at 17 games. Of note, the longest NHL undefeated streak was set by the 1979-80 Flyers, who were not beaten in 35 games (25 wins, 10 ties).
